2012 is approaching fast... and so ahead of the forewarned millennial tensions, fellow minds 2tall, Dudley Perkins (aka Declaime) and Georgia Anne Muldrow bring you 'Beautiful Mindz' - an album as deep as the prophecies and universal truths it talks about.

2tall's first full length offering since his debut album, 'Beautiful Mindz' is a showcase of the new directions and work the man has been looking into over the last few years. This time 2tall is at the production helm of this spaceship, directing Dudley and Georgia over a collection of deep instrumentals that fit the vocals like a glove. The album has been a long work in progress, stemming from a chance encounter and short session between 2tall and Dudley back in 2005. 2 years and some much longer and deeper sessions later and 'Beautiful Mindz' is ready to be unleashed.

Like a lot of good music it talks best by itself, so I won't indulge in mass amounts of write ups and praise, but just leave it as what I believe it is - a fuckin good album that deserves to be heard by many people. 2tall turned in an amazing effort production wise - showing a new side to his musical persona and bringing in some amazing vocal contributions from Dudley and Georgia.

With the working process having been a long winded one, where 2tall finished the album around the vocal sessions recorded in 2005, it's amazing how easily the album flows by and how natural it feels.

Anyways as I said the music speaks best by itself, so get your right clicking on and download this promo mix by 2tall. You can also check out an exclusive from the album on the recent TTR podcast and check out more audio previews over at 2tall's myspace page.

'Beautiful Mindz' lands in the summer of 2007 on Eclectic Breaks records, CD album only for the time being.
